Dead To It – Heron

a slow, aching swirl of lo-fi sadness – dead to it feels like it's falling apart in the most beautiful, stunning way. heron's voice is close and fragile, like someone who's just learning to tell the truth. it moves with a quiet gravity, and a softness that kinda makes the whole thing hit harder.

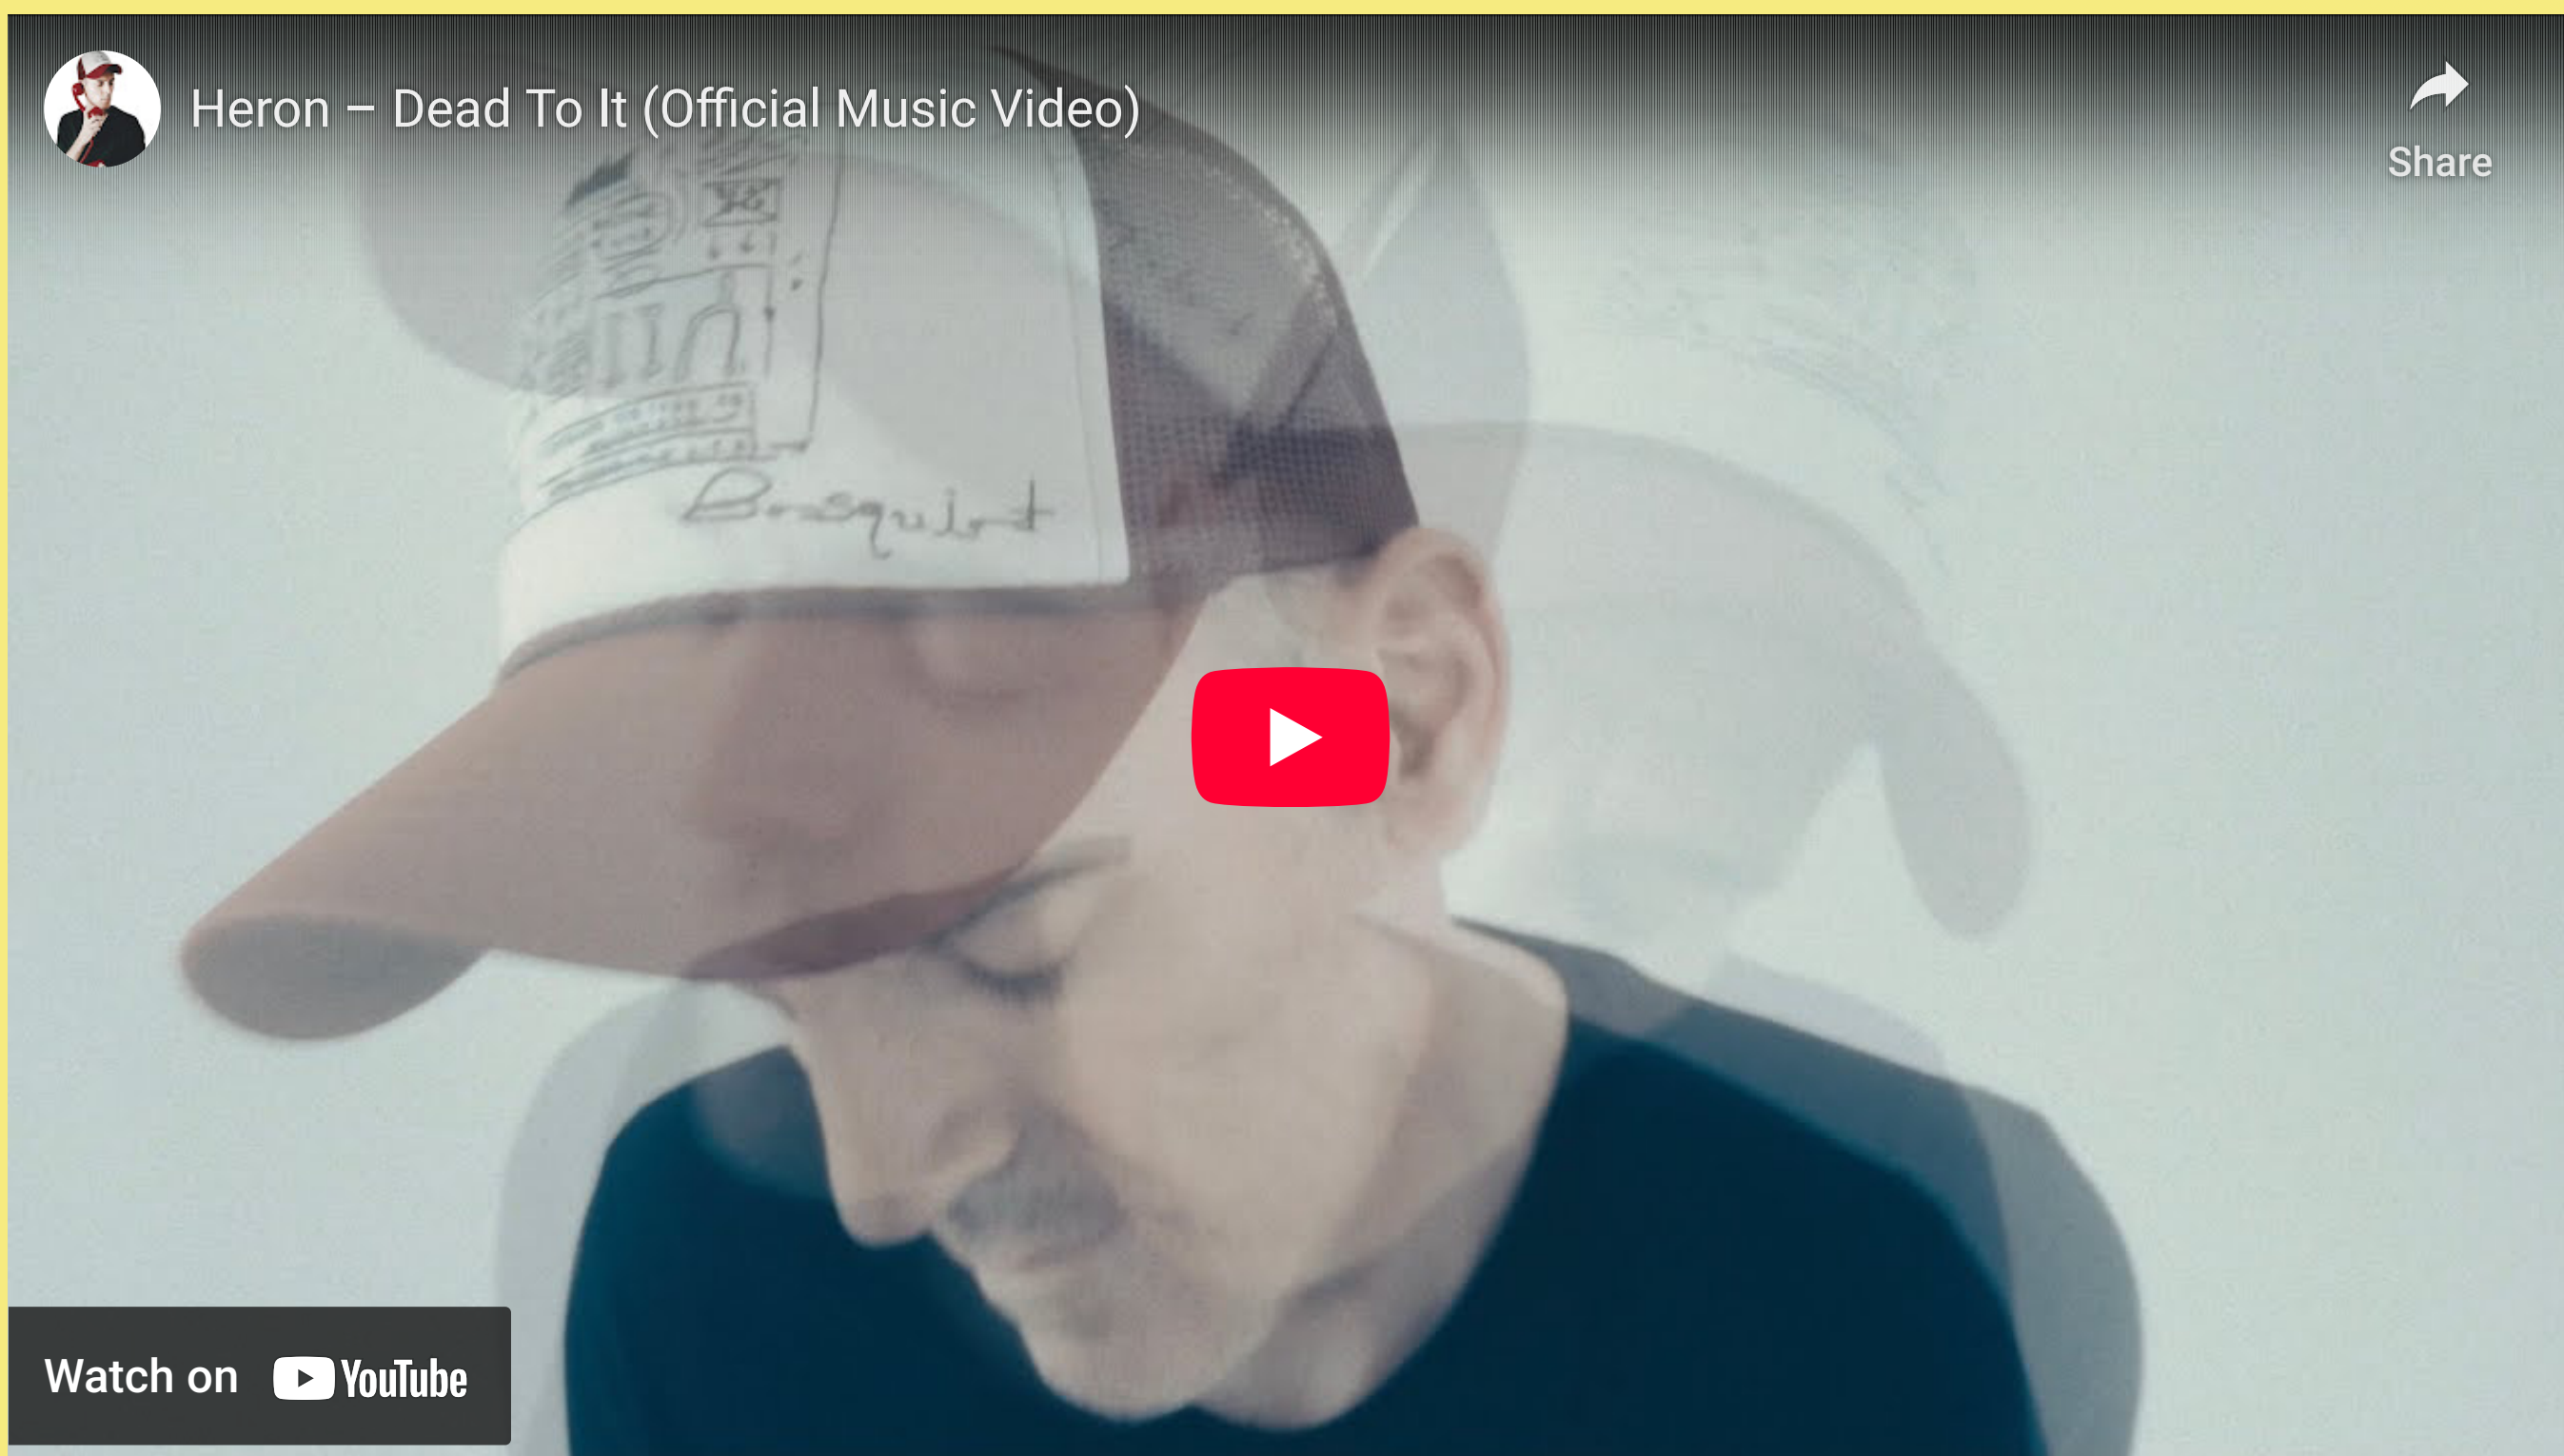

this one builds and builds with such skill – delicate guitar, incredible melodies, ghostly layers, and a final moment of emotional release.

in a world of bland music, there's a boldness to this tune that is both admirable and – in even better news – just sounds fucking great.

part of his upcoming record underground sky, and made fully by hand – vocals, mix, artwork, video – everything.

thank u for making this heron x
